02 — BEFORE YOU BEGIN

From one line to a whole café

Maan sells three things — coffee, pastry and bread — and needed one identity to hold them together. This file starts with the foundations (the bilingual logo, colour and type), then the graphic language built from them, then the coffee range and labels, and finally everything the customer touches in the café.

Persian, then English
Persian text from the work is translated into English beside it.

Mockups and photos
Flat artwork is shown first, then the same piece in use.

One system
Every application is built from the logo, the circles and the green.

03 — THE BRIEF

Three crafts, one name

Maan is a bakery, pastry shop and coffee house in Tehran. The identity had to work in two scripts, on everything from a 5 cm sticker to a shop sign, and make three very different products feel like they come from the same kitchen.

Coffee

Espresso bar and roasted beans to take home in three house blends.

Pastry

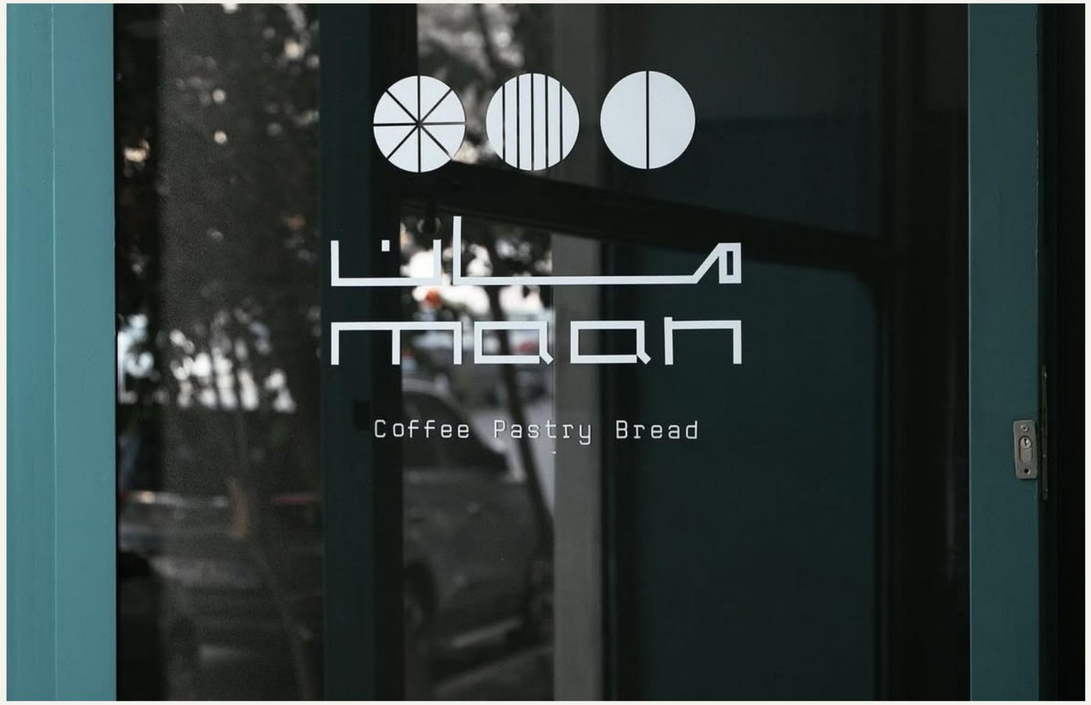

Cakes, tartlets, cookies and laminated pastries baked daily.

Bread

Loaves and flatbreads from the bakery counter.

04 — LOGO

Two scripts, one line

The wordmark sets the Persian name مان directly above the Latin maan. Both are drawn with the same single straight stroke and square corners, so they read as one mark rather than a translation.

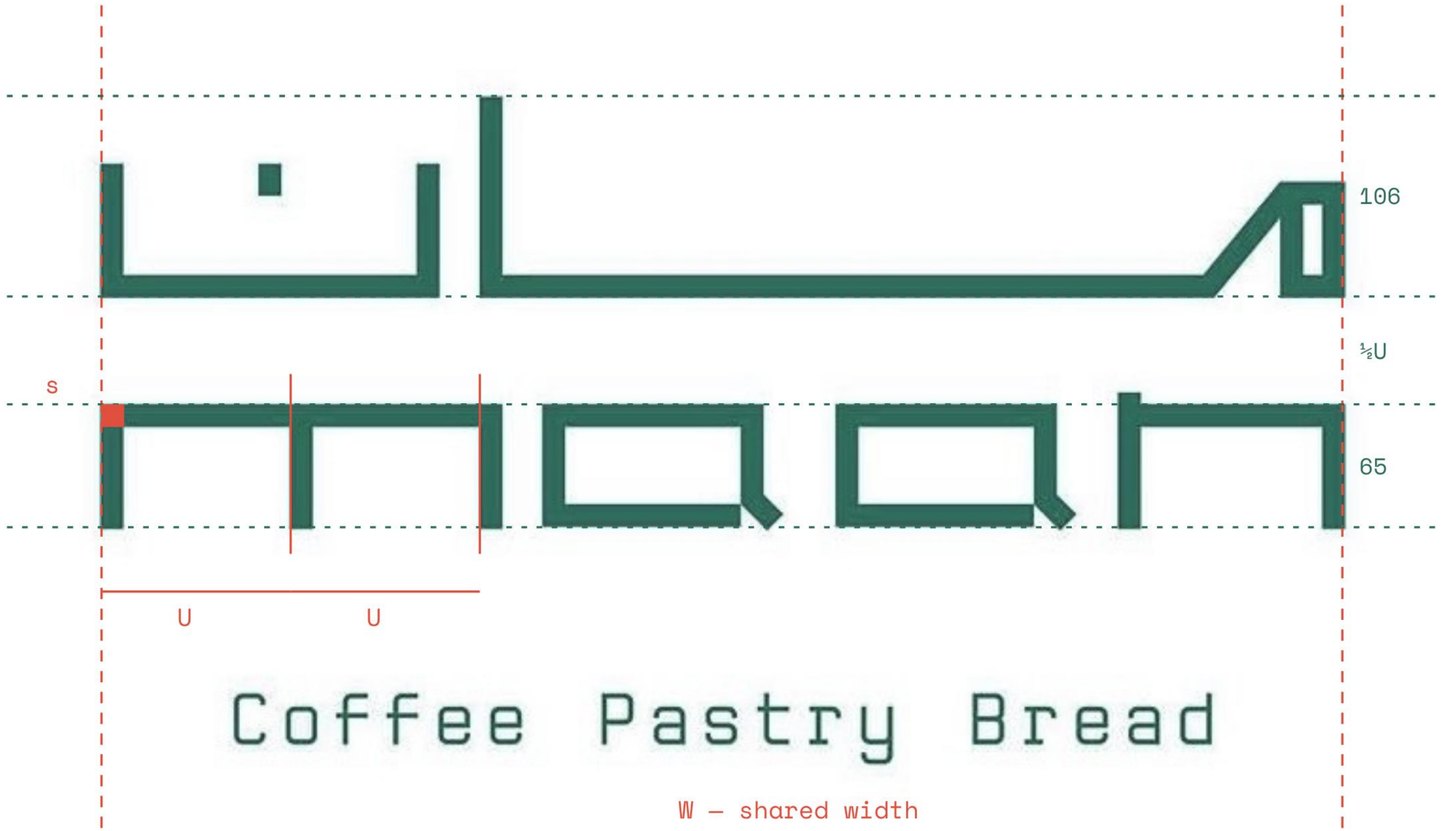

Beneath, the tagline Coffee Pastry Bread is set in a wide monospace — the three things the shop makes, in the order you smell them walking in.

05 — CONSTRUCTION

One stroke, one width

Measured from the master artwork. The whole mark is drawn with a single line weight, and both scripts are fitted to the same width — the simple rule that makes it feel calm and built.

STROKE	One weight everywhere — s ≈ 1/55 of the logo's width, square ends and corners
WIDTH	Persian and Latin lines start and end at exactly the same edges (W)
MODULE	The stems of the Latin m sit one unit U apart; the letters are built on that rhythm
HEIGHTS	Persian line ≈ 1.6 × the Latin x-height, so the two scripts carry equal weight
SPACING	The gap between the lines is about half a unit; the tagline sits a full unit below

06 — COLOUR & TYPE

Green, paper, kraft

A deep, slightly blue green — calmer than the usual café brown — on clean white and natural kraft. A single red appears only on the round stamp, like an ink seal on a bakery box.

07 — THREE MARKS

Coffee, pastry, bread

Each product gets one circle and one simple cut. Together, the three circles become a second logo — short enough for a cup, a sticker or a profile picture.

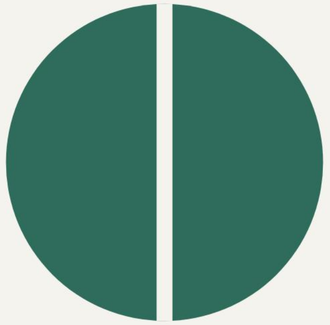

Bread

Parallel cuts, like the scoring on a loaf.

Pastry

A round cake cut into eight slices.

Coffee

A single line down the middle, like the crease of a coffee bean.

Stacked vertically, the three marks run down the side of a cup.

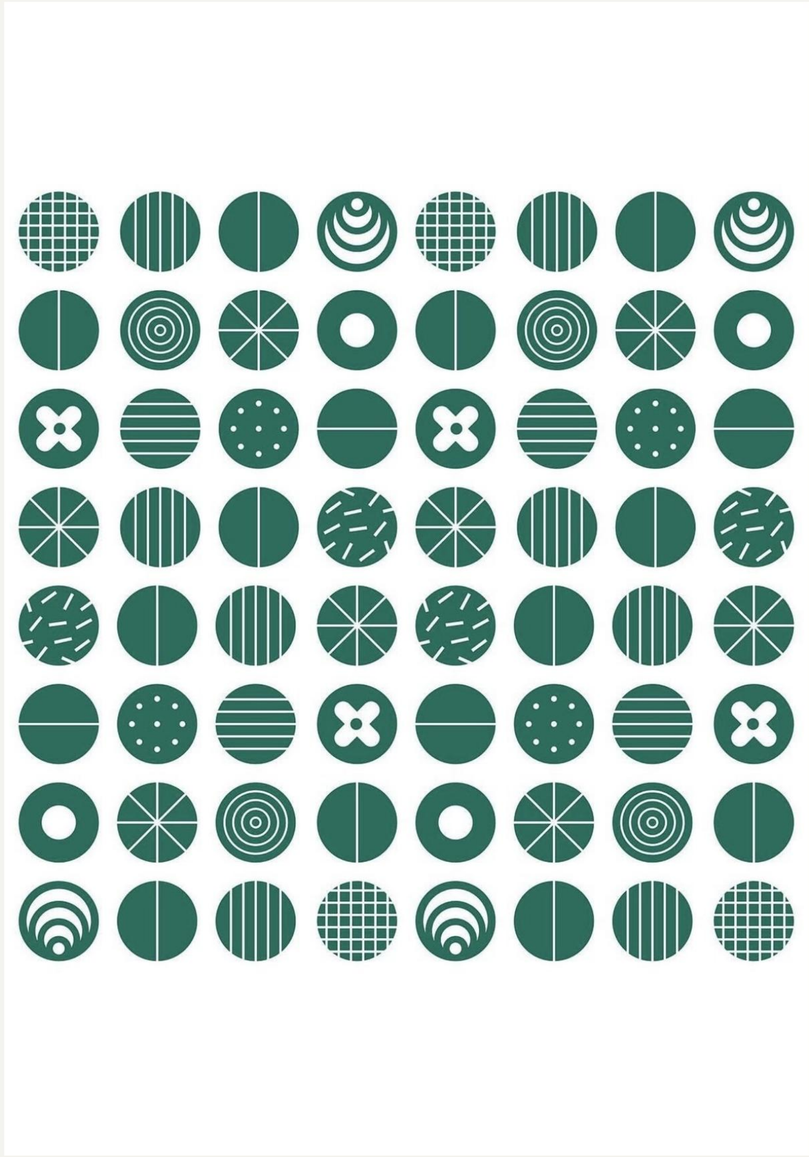

08 — PATTERN LIBRARY

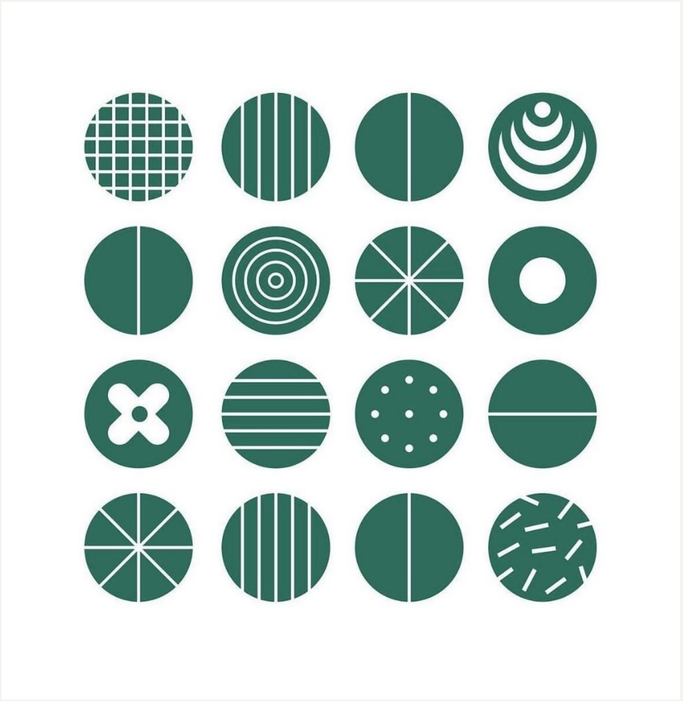

A tray of round tiles

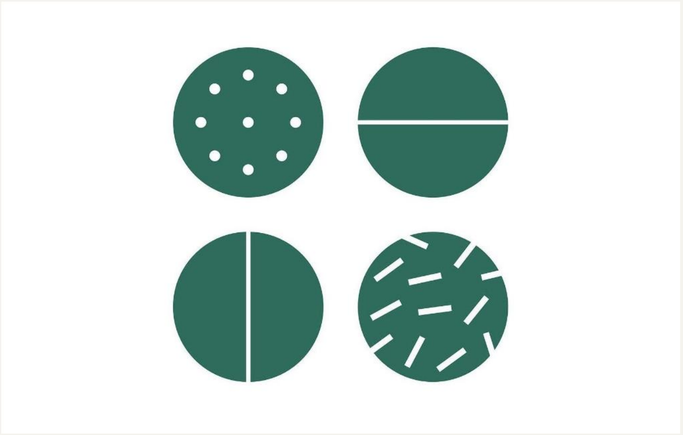

From the three marks grew a family of about fifteen circles — grids, rings, dots, sprinkles, half-moons, a flower — like biscuits laid out on a tray. Repeated in a grid they become wrapping paper, tape, box sides and backgrounds.

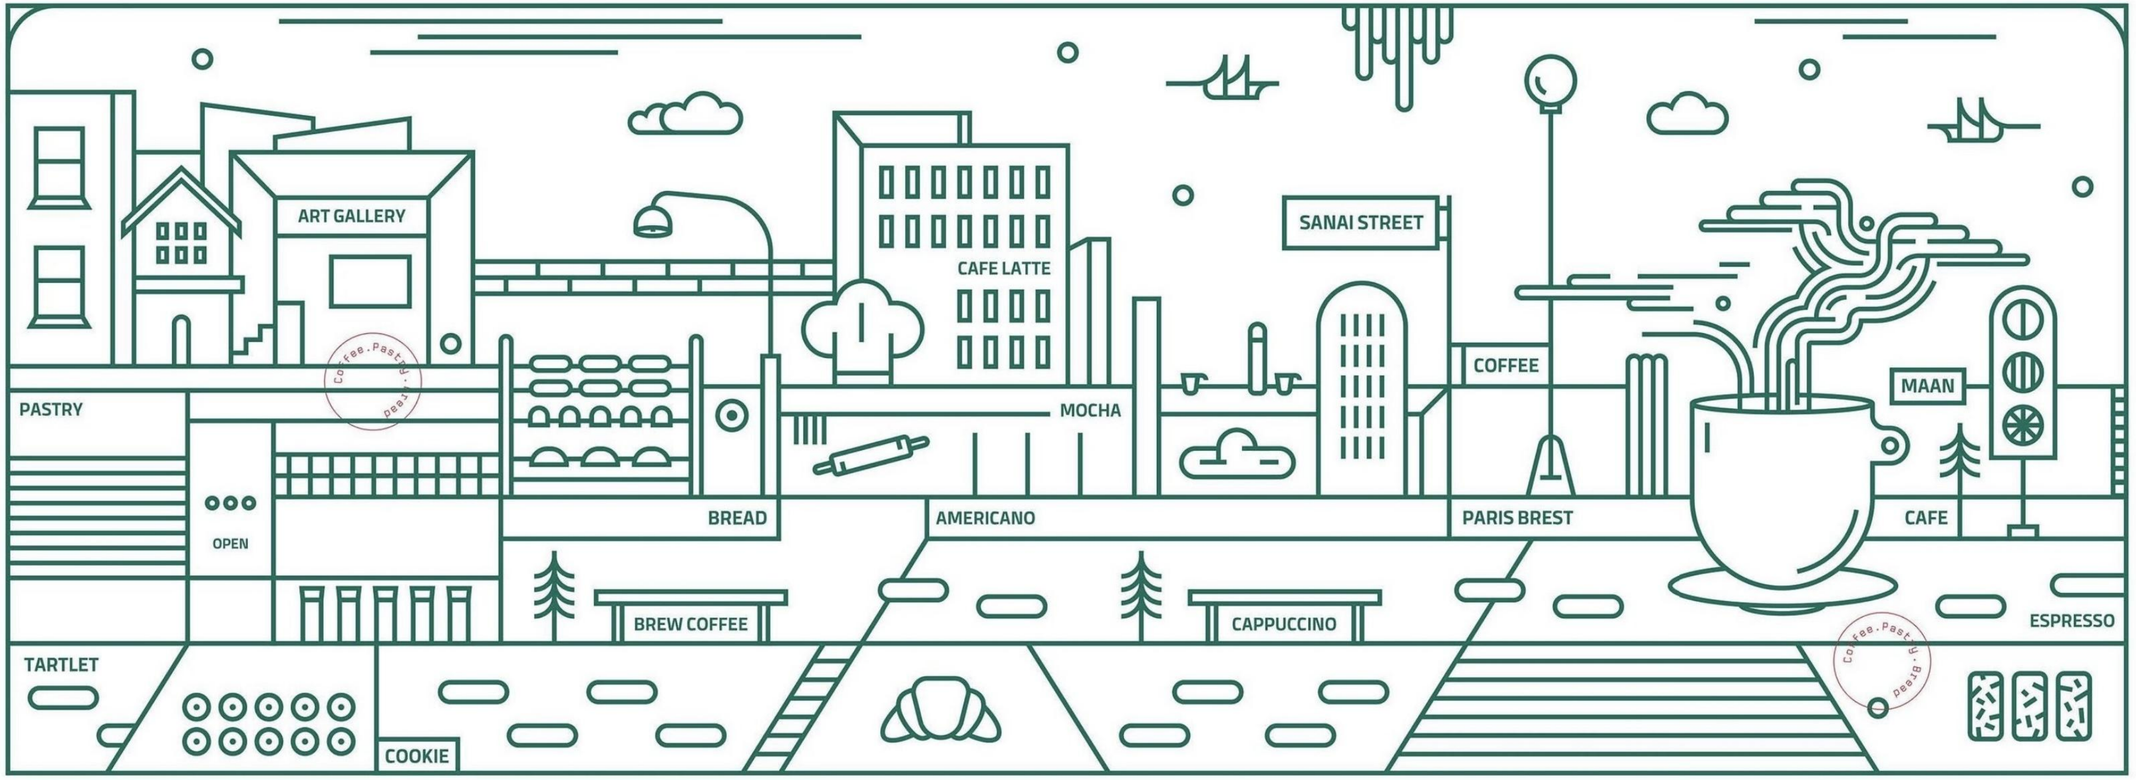

09 — STREET ILLUSTRATION

A Tehran street in one line

A long panorama drawn with the logo's single stroke: the bakery shelves, an art gallery, Sanai Street, a steaming cup — and the menu written into the city as shop signs. It runs in three panels that join into one continuous pattern, used on the white cups and wrapping.

Panel 1 · bakery, gallery, pastry

Panel 2 · Sanai Street, café drinks

Panel 3 · the cup, the three marks, the logo

10 — STAMPS & STICKERS

Seal it, tape it

Small pieces that close the bags and boxes: a red “Coffee · Pastry · Bread” round stamp, a circular Persian seal, a square monospace tag, and long strips of tape carrying the logo and the pattern circles.

ROUND STAMP	Red outline or solid, set on a curve — the only red in the system
PERSIAN SEAL	Text running around a green disc
TAPE	Logo strip and pattern strip for sealing boxes and bags

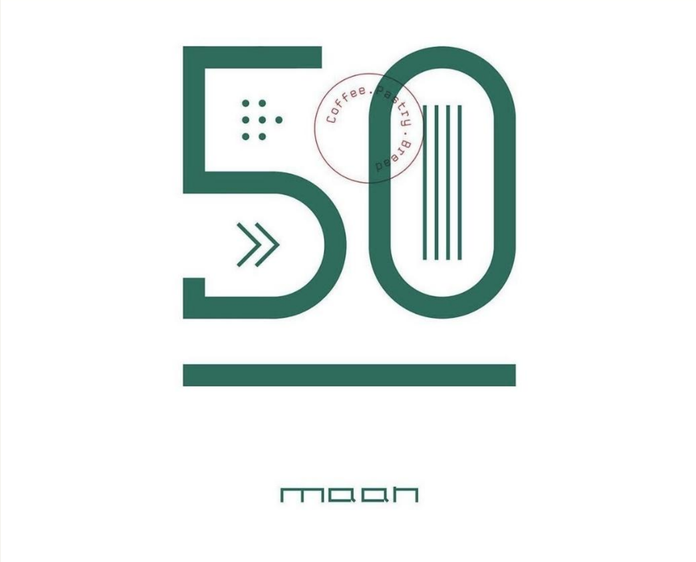

11 — THE NUMBERS

The blend is the name

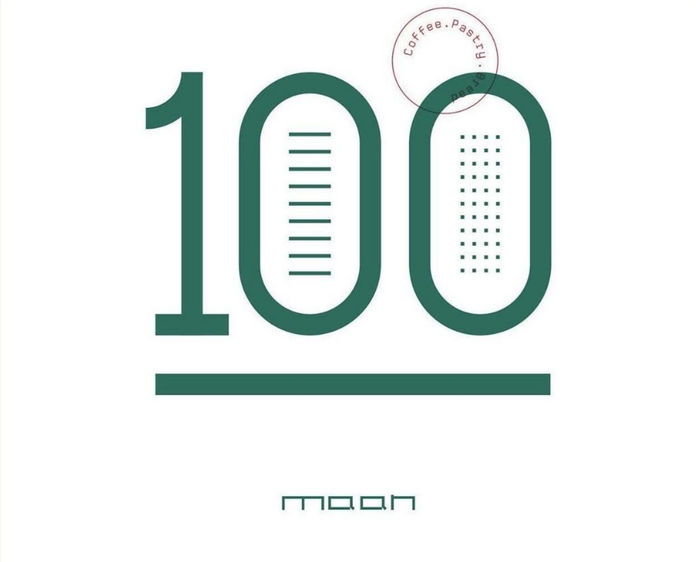

Maan roasts three house blends, named simply by their share of Arabica: 50, 80 and 100. The number became the label. Each numeral is drawn with the logo's stroke and its counters are filled with the pattern library — so every bag is different, but obviously family.

50% Dots and an arrow inside the 5, upright lines inside the 0.

80% A plus and a times sign in the two loops of the 8, slanted lines in the 0.

100% Horizontal lines in one 0, a grid of dots in the other.

12 — LABELS

Read a blend at a glance

Each label has the same three parts: the big number, a short Persian description of the blend, and a five-square scale for acidity, bitterness, sweetness, body and roast. Customers can compare the three bags without asking.

THE THREE BLENDS, TRANSLATED FROM THE LABELS

50

Medium roast

50% Arabica · 50% Robusta

Balanced and classic. Chocolate and spice, high caffeine — made for espresso, moka pot and drip machines.

Bitterness	■■■■□
Sweetness	■■■□□
Body	■■■■□
Roast	■■■□□

South America + East Asia

80

Medium-dark roast

The most popular blend. Medium-high citrus acidity with a nutty bitterness.

Acidity	■■■□□

Body	■■■□□
Roast	■■■■□

Two South American Arabicas + one East Asian Robusta

100

Bitterness	■■□□□
Sweetness	■■■□□

Roast	■■■□□

One South American + one African Arabica

13 — PACKAGING

Kraft, green, a number

Stand-up kraft bags for roasted beans, with two faces: the brand side (numeral, three circles and logo, sealed with the red stamp) and the information side (the full label). A single-origin edition uses a green panel instead of a number.

14 — CUPS

Green to go, white to stay

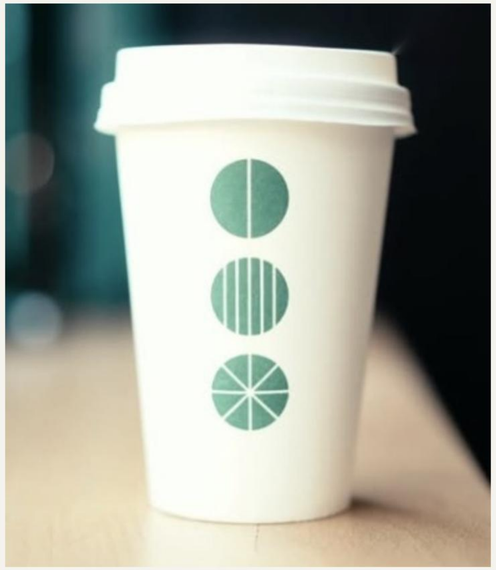

Two cup families. Green take-away cups carry the three marks and the logo; white cups carry a fine-line drawing of the café's street, with the cup itself drawn on a table — a small story for people who sit down.

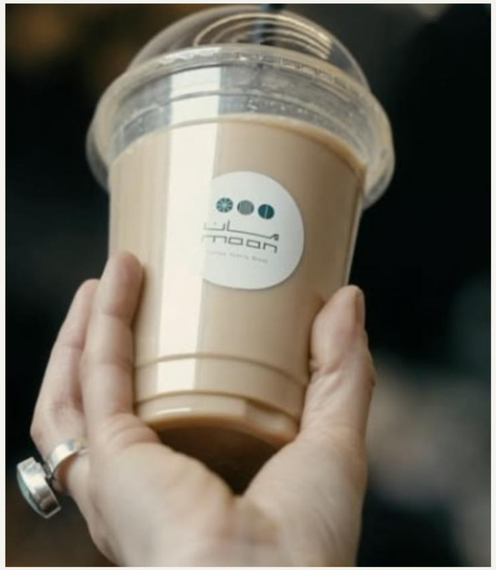

15 — MENU

A menu like a ledger

White sheets clipped to a green board. Sections for pastry and bread, each item in Persian and English with its price on a ruled line, the logo and three marks at the top and a QR code at the foot — as plain and orderly as a baker's order book.

The brand in use

Posts for @maan_coffee mix designed graphics — the logo at night, a Nowruz card drawn in the logo's single line, “together at Maan” — with photos of the packaging, cups and boxes in the café.
