How to read this file

Fifteen boards in four parts. Each part grows out of the one before it: first the name, then the shapes drawn from the name, then the things a customer carries home.

PART 1 — Introduction — 01 – 03
The shop, the brief and what the identity had to do.

PART 2 — The name — 04 – 07
The wordmark in two scripts, the monogram, colour and the playful lettering.

PART 3 — A system of shapes — 08 – 10
Cookie icons, the emblem, nine patterns, stickers and tags.

PART 4 — On the counter — 11 – 15
Boxes, bags, bread wraps, the opening-day posts and credits.

01 — THE BRIEF

A pastry shop that speaks two languages

Lando is a pastry shop in Tehran. It needed an identity that feels warm and a little playful, sits as comfortably in Persian as in English, and stretches across everything a pastry shop hands over the counter: boxes, bags, bread wraps, stickers and the posts that announced its opening.

The answer is a single rounded line. It draws both names, curls into a monogram, becomes six cookie icons and repeats into patterns — so every piece, large or small, comes from the same hand.

TWO SCRIPTS	One stroke weight and rounded ends shared by Latin and Persian letters
MANY SMALL OBJECTS	A monogram and icons that still read at sticker size
SOFT, NOT SUGARY	Pastel pink and mint, held together by a deep slate

02 — WORDMARK

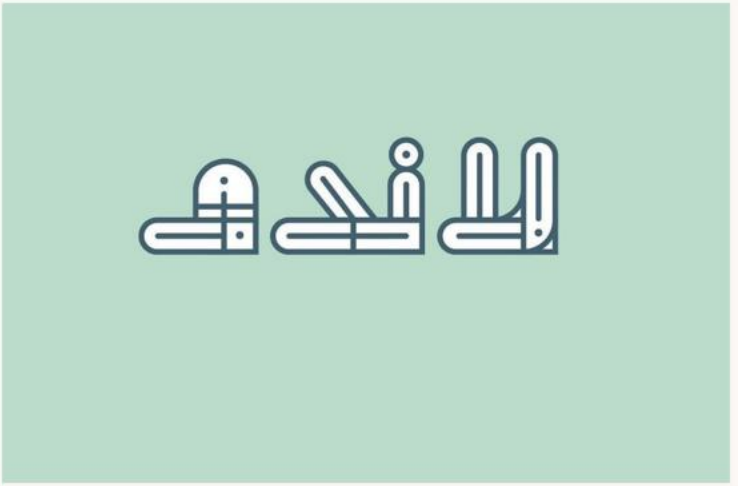

One line, two scripts

LANDO and لاندو are drawn, not typed. Both are built from the same rounded monoline — an even stroke, soft terminals and an open inner channel — so the two names carry the same weight and neither reads as a translation of the other.

LATIN	Geometric capitals; the O drawn as a ring
PERSIAN	The same stroke, joined along one baseline
LOCKUP	Monogram, both names and LANDO PASTRY / شیرینی فروشی لاندو

Persian — لاندو

03 — MONOGRAM

An L that talks

The monogram sets the L of Lando inside a speech bubble — a shop that greets you before you walk in. It is the mark that travels furthest: onto seals, stamps, ribbons and the corner of every box.

Its partner is the O of the wordmark, drawn as a round maze. Together they give the identity two small marks that work where the full name has no room.

04 — COLOUR

Pink, mint and a deep slate

Two pastels carry the sweetness; the slate keeps them grown-up and gives every line its contrast. Pink and mint swap roles — ground and accent — from one piece to the next, so a set of boxes reads as a family rather than a repeat.

GROUNDS	Pink and mint, used full-bleed
LINE	Slate for every drawn stroke
AIR	White for labels, wraps and patterns

05 — PLAYFUL LETTERING

The name, taken apart

Loosened from the baseline, the letters of LANDO and لاندو become a game: strokes tilt, dots scatter, the O turns into a maze. This looser version is kept for moments of celebration — opening posts and gift tags — while the upright wordmark does the everyday work.

06 — ICONS & EMBLEM

Six cookies, one stroke

Six biscuit shapes — a dotted square, a dotted round, twin fingers, a layered bar, a flower and a ring — drawn with the wordmark's stroke. Arranged in a radial burst they become the emblem; repeated, they become patterns.

07 — PATTERNS

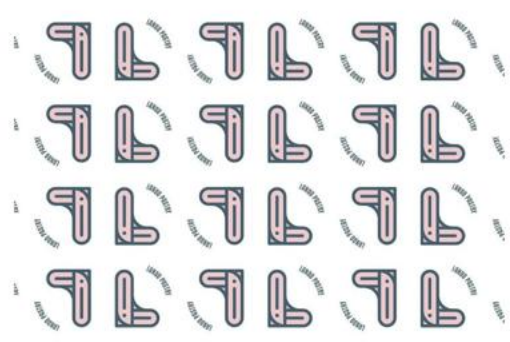

Nine repeats, one family

Every pattern is built from parts already in the system — the monogram, its bubble, the cookie icons and the stretched letters — so a box lining, a bread wrap and an Instagram background all belong together.

Light versions sit behind text; dense versions cover whole surfaces.

08 — SMALL PRINT

Stickers, seals and gift tags

The smallest pieces do a lot of work in a pastry shop: they close the box and go home with the customer. Round stickers rotate the monogram and both wordmarks through pink, mint and white; hanging tags pick up the playful lettering; a rubber stamp marks paper by hand.

09 — PACKAGING

A box for every size of order

Pink and mint swap roles from one box to the next — a pink lid on a mint base, then the reverse. The lid carries the stacked wordmark, the side the monogram, and the base is wrapped in the stripe pattern, so a stack on the counter reads as one set.

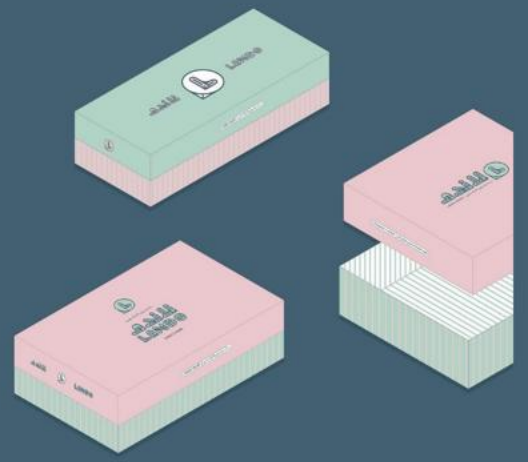

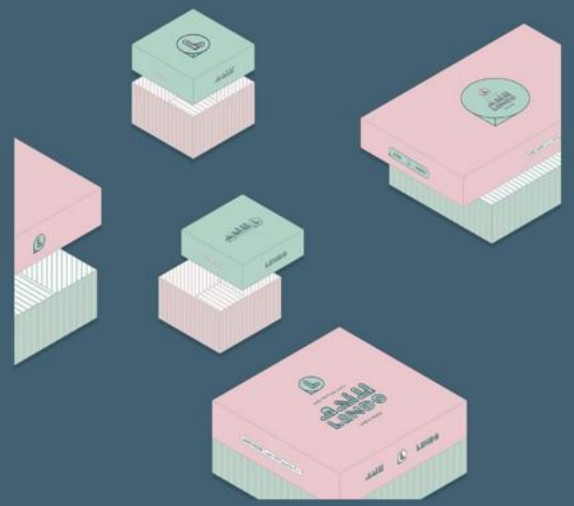

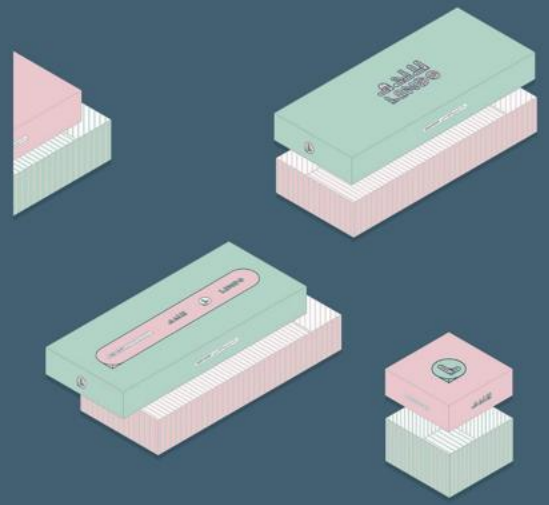

10 — THE BOX FAMILY

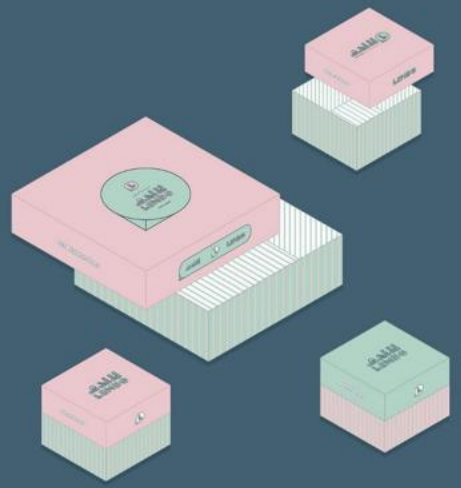

Long, square, deep, flat

Five formats for cookies, pastries and cakes. Open the lid and the inside is lined with the brand stripes.

11 — TO GO

Bags, bread wraps and a macaron sleeve

Takeaway pieces use the identity at its simplest: a pink paper bag with the stacked wordmark, a mint pouch, bread sleeves printed with the lettering and the bubble pattern, and a slim sliding box for macarons tied with a ribbon.

12 — OPENING DAY

Announcing the shop on Instagram

The grid on @lando_ir introduced the identity piece by piece — monogram, both wordmarks, the emblem and the playful lettering. One post is the opening invitation itself: Lando invites you to the opening at 18:00 on 5 Tir 1403 (25 June 2024).
